W. S. Holifield accompanied by W. C. Howard returned from a trip to Lubbock this week. They report Lubbock one of the most enterprising cities in west Texas. Also state that fine brick buildings are going up right along and that an opera house is now nearing completion that would do credit to many of the larger cities of Texas.

So much for Lubbock, but how long will it be before Lovington can be boasting of the same?

She started out much the same way. We can remember having seen pictures of Lubbock's largest garage when surrounded with autos that would not number as many as we have on our streets every day. Now her inhabitants are numbered by thousands her farmers prosperous and feasible reports founded upon facts that the Santa Fe intends building a road farther into the plains country of the west from that point.

If this be so, and the Midland & Northwestern continue to build to Seminole, which by the Midland Reporter we note that more scrapers and teams have been ordered. Lovington will surely stand a chance to make a better town than ever though we have them booked any farther than Brownfield and Seminole so far.
